

Game 7, June 12, 2009 at the Joe

It used to only take eight wins to claim the cup.

Three huge saves in the 2009 Playoffs:
Game 7 versus Ovechkin
Game 6 versus Cleary and Game 7 versus Lidstrom

No-hands Talbot

Scores both goals in game 7!

Evgeni “Geno” Malkin becomes the first Russian to win the Conn Smythe Trophy

No-hands Talbot

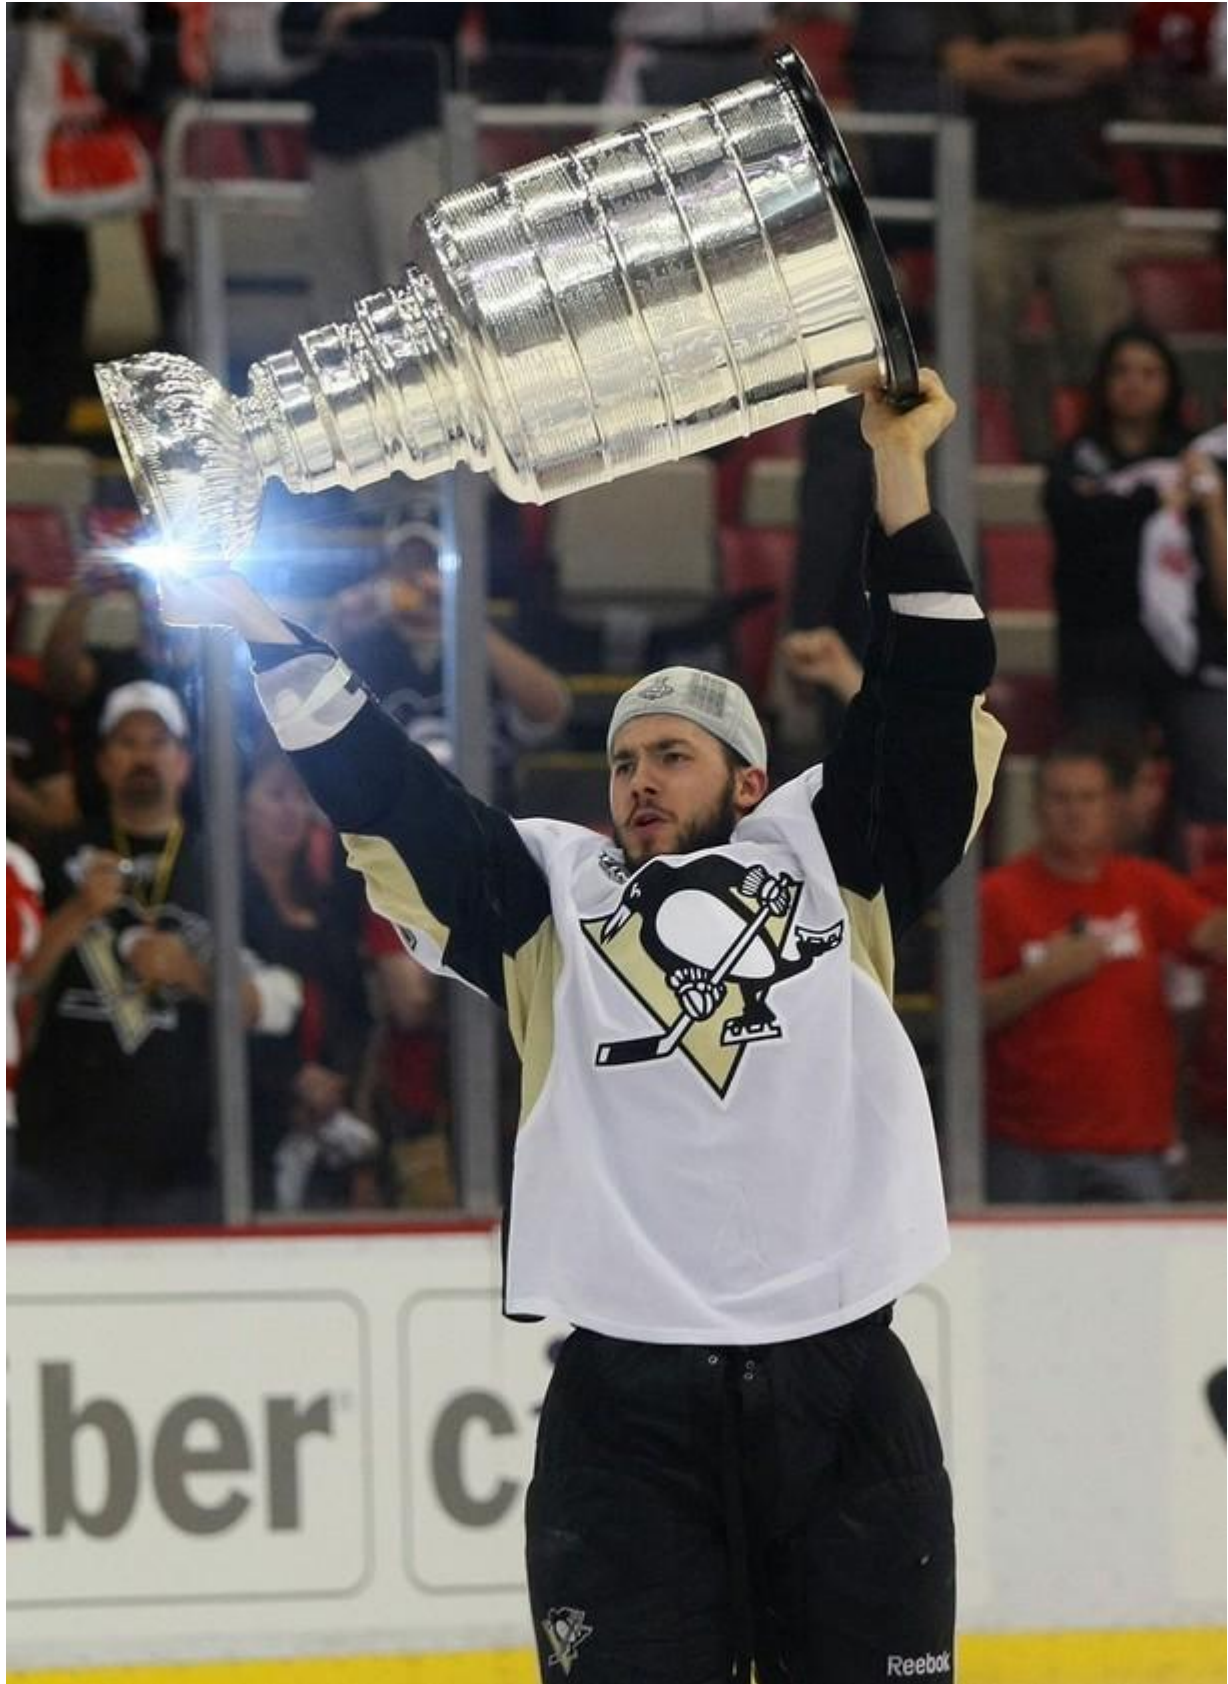

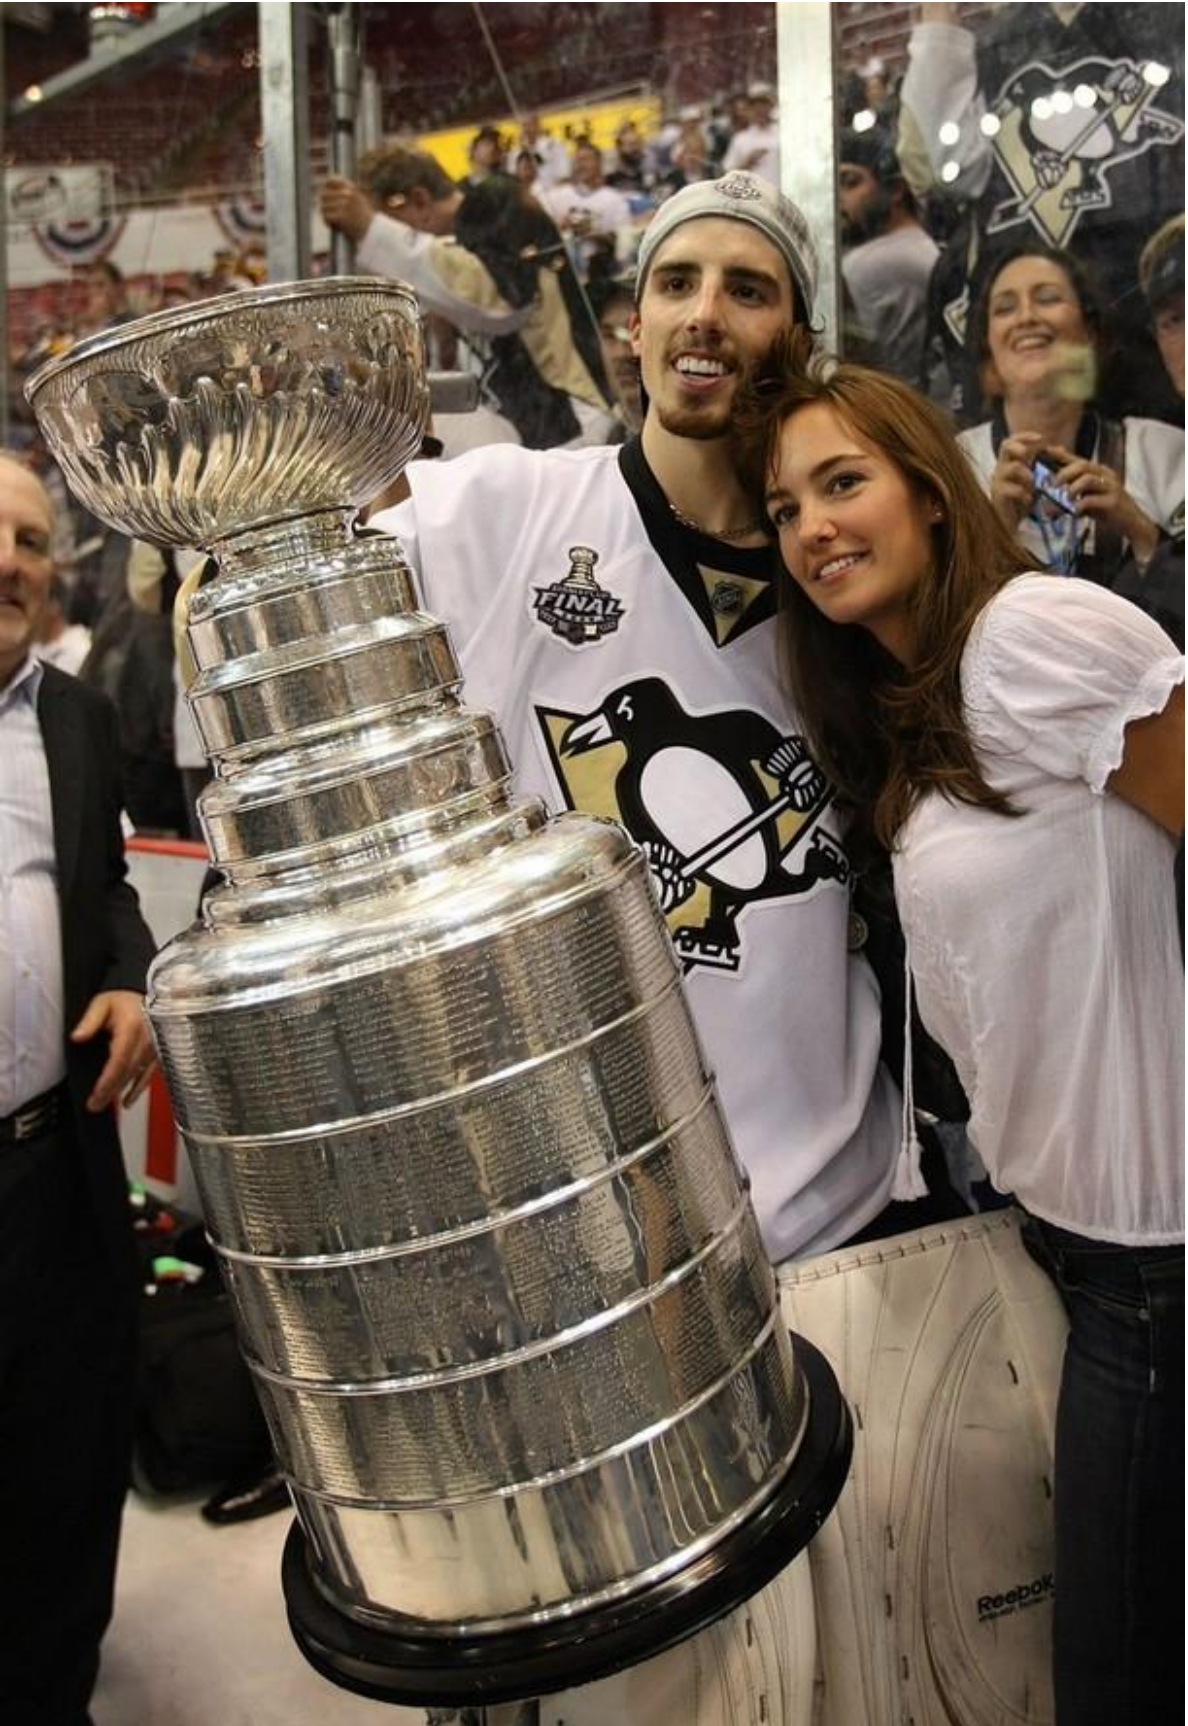

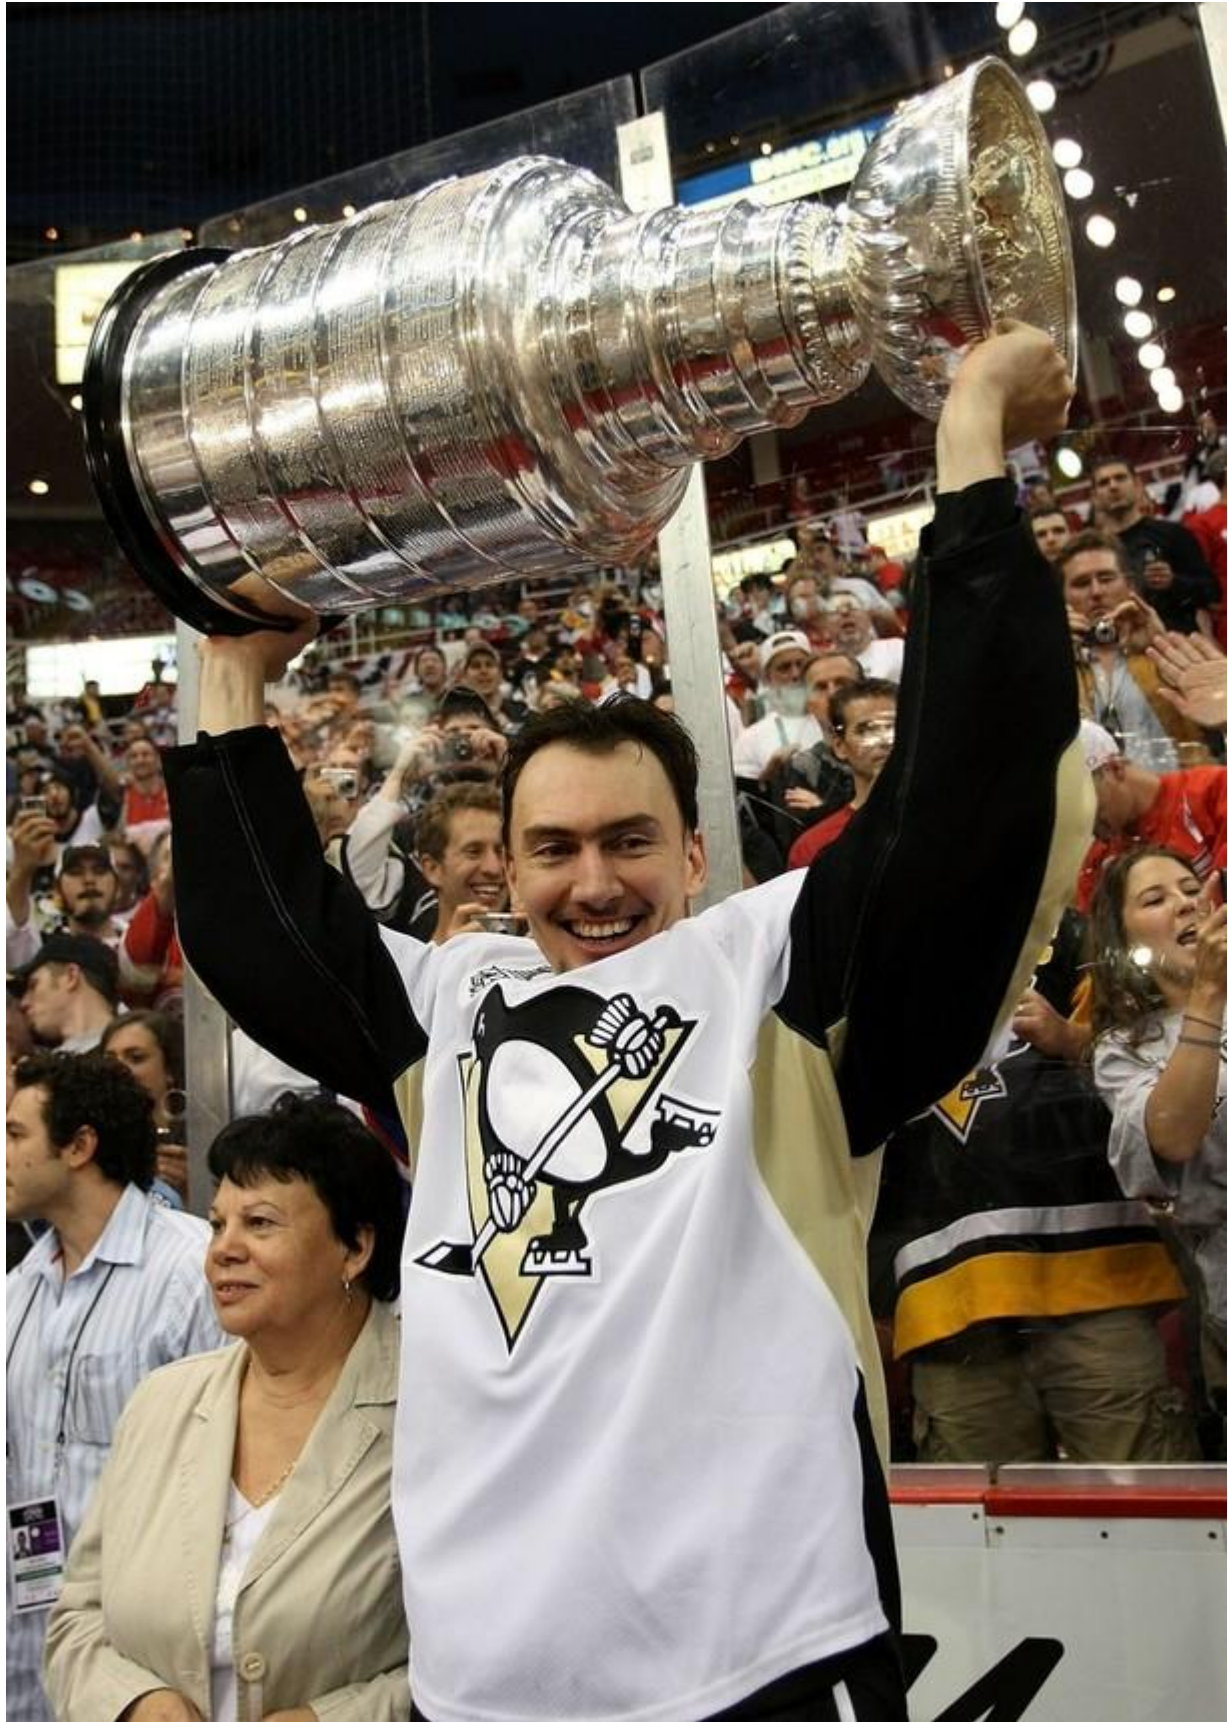

Geno pours champagne from the Stanley Cup on Mario Lemieux, co-owner and chairman of the Penguins

The old bar never looked soooo good!!!

"It's a tough pill to swallow."

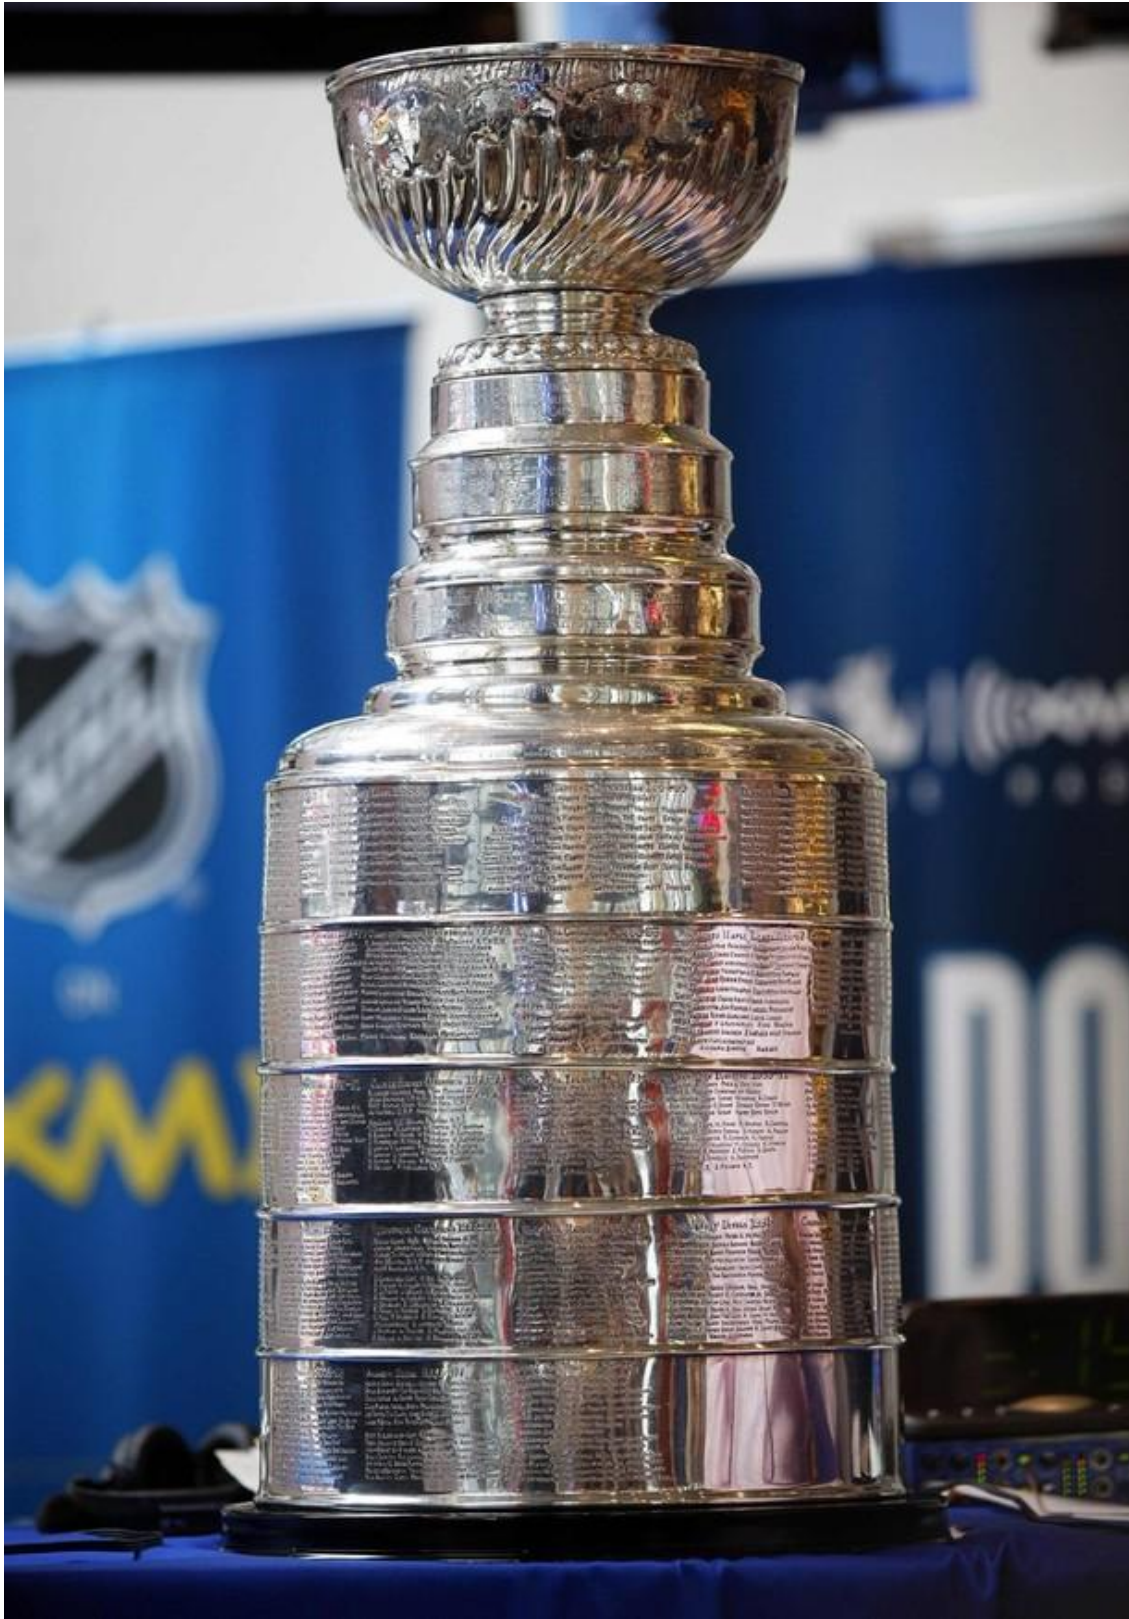

The Penguins didn't need Hossa to beat Detroit and they wisely used the money they didn't spend on him on other players, some of whom they can retain in the future because Hossa isn't around collecting big paychecks.

Hossa turned down a long-term deal worth almost $50 million last summer for a one-year contract worth about $7.5 million, leaving the runner-up Penguins to play for the defending champions.

He said the Penguins didn't rub it in during the postgame handshake.

Yesssss!!!!!!!

Pens beat the Red Wings 2 – 1 in Game 7 on June 12, 2009 in Detroit to win the Stanley Cup four games to three.
