

I love my 535D, but with all the amazing extras it was fitted with, it has really surprised me that it doesn't come with Xenons. Further more, the headlamps it does have on dipped beam, are woefully inadequate. I live in the middle of nowhere down a shady lane in Suffolk, and with the nights drawing in, I didn't want the drive home to be illuminated by the current candles.

So I ordered a set off of E-Bay and have decided to fit them today. I'm sure that many of you have done this before, and it's not difficult, but just in case someone is out there and is a bit worried about how to do it, I've photographed the procedure and included it below.

For those of you in the know, my apologise for the boring blog entry.
